The song first appeared as the first track to the band's third studio album, Mutter (2001), and was used as the first track for concerts in that era. He also appeared on made in Germany's greatest hits 1995-2011 (2011), being the only song on the album that was not released as a single or had a music video at the time of release. The song was released as a single in 2012 to promote the upcoming Video Collection 1995-2012. The piano version of the song was released as a single on December 7, 2012. The lyrics include a narrator describing the horrors of nightmares. The first line is an intro and chorus of songs (Nun, liebe Kinder, gebt fein Acht. Ich habe euch etwas mitgebracht, which means now, dear kids, pay attention. I brought something for you) taken from the German children's TV show Sandm'nnchen (Mr. Sandman), which provided the children with a bedtime story. The song's narrator appears as a darker version of the character. Music Videos Two separate videos were produced for Mein Herz Brennt, one for the original version and the other for the piano version. Both were filmed in the main bathroom of Theils-Heilshutten, and were filmed by zoran Bihac, who had previously shot a music video for Links 2-3-4 and then directed music videos for Mein Teil and Rosenrot. Bihac described the link between the two videos as yin and yang, with the piano version the last. Piano version Clip on piano version of the song premiere at 7 2012 on Vimeo. In the video, vocalist Till Lindemann is dressed in a black dress and fishing nets, as well as sporting black and white face paint. The entire bathroom is light red, and in the center is a T-shaped pool that emits light. The video consists of a close-up of Lindemann singing from behind the pool until the second verse begins where he starts walking towards the pool leg. As the song closes, Lindemann walks into it and its light fades. The clip on the piano version is the first video since Mutter to show only Lindemann. The original video version for the original version was released on December 14, 2012. In this video, the Sandman character is played by Melanie Gajdos. She first appears before the sleeping Richard Kruspe, causing nightmares and sending him into agony. Meanwhile, Till terrorizes the complex Bilitz-Heilshutten, which operates an orphanage. He kidnaps orphans and places them in a cage located in the main bathroom. The warden tries to protect the children with a shotgun, but Till overpowers her. The warden appears in the video as young (Victoria Bojarskaja) and old (Anna von Ruden), while Till remains the same age, indicating immortality and paranormal abilities. Protecting orphans, Till takes a grotesque, insect-like shape with an elongated head and fingers. Children are then used in various examinations and surgeries with the rest of the group, playing doctors. In addition, a female warden helps them in her younger form. One of the surgeries sees the baby's tears extracted through a syringe, which is then vaginally injected by Sandman. Sandman is also being examined by doctors, as Paul H. Landers is seen giving her a gynecological examination. Later, she wears a dress that protects her two young children, which may indicate that tears are involved in the form of in vitro fertilization. While Till is away from the main bathroom, the children (pictured by the rest of the group as disheveled adults) escape from their cage and orphanage. This forces Till to break free and absorb his heart, while Heilst'tten is consumed by hell. The video ends with the freed walk from the building, while a chorus of piano versions plays in the background, signaling a video of the piano version as an afterword.
